

Dr Jemma Tyson, PhD

Jemma is Senior Lecturer in Criminology at the University of Portsmouth.

Her PhD research examined the policing of disablist hate crime, particularly towards people with learning disabilities, and explored the perceptions and experiences of both service users and service providers. She has engaged with and provided independent support to regional and national organisations, across a number of criminal justice issues relating to this area.

Jemma leads for the Independent Advisory Group on engagement with your people and has chaired a youth IAG to ensure their views feed into decisions.
